This proposed bill is an underhanded lie which has been clearly written with international corporate interests in mind. It is also clear to anyone in the technology community that the people who propose these “security” bills neither care for the public's security nor understand what these proposals actually mean or do.

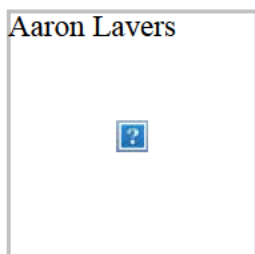

If a ‘backdoor’ exists in software, it means that this backdoor is available to anyone - both the intended parties and malicious parties alike.

This bill directly opens up Australian technology companies to foreign exploits.

But, as with all government proposals on IT security... That's what you want to achieve, isn't it? (You don't need to answer that, we all know the answer already)

Best regards,
