Dear Committee members,

We may not have a Bill of Rights but surely we have a right to privacy. For the government to consider even more draconian legislation is outrageous especially given the never-ending breaches of supposedly secure data. If you attempt to force companies to provide a 'back-door' into their software you are guaranteeing that that same software will be broken into by people far smarter than anyone the government employs.

Just look back at the chaos of the Census. Woeful doesn't cover it.

Finally, do you really want Australia to be compared to the digital war that countries like China, Russia and Egypt conduct against their own citizens?

Please abandon this legislation.

Ian Camp
