

To whom it may concern,

I do not think that the The Assistance and Access Bill 2018 will meet it's stated goals. I also think there will be unintended, negative, consequences related to the reduced security it demands.

I believe that the Bill is poorly thought out, lacks proper consultation with the relevant communities – Australian and technical - and is difficult to implement.

Maybe worst of all, it will have the effect of making us less secure rather than more secure.

I would urge you to reconsider this Bill.

Lachlan Simpson