Hi there,

It concerns me greatly that we seek to give the ability to bypass someones privacy with no reasonable checks or considerations.

If there are indeed incidents where this kind of excessive access to someones data is required, then surely it should be treated as similar to law enforcement agencies gaining access to a suspected offenders private residence, rather than without any checks or balances allowing an agency just to gain access to someones digital property.

I would strongly urge that this be reconsidered.

Regards,

Paul Harris.
