Hi there,

I've just spent 2 year living overseas, and have had the unpleasant experience of being pressured in to unlocking my phone in order to enter a country. It is a huge violation given many people have their whole lives on their phone.

Please don't bring this to Australia, please instead invest your time in to making polices that address the issues from other angles rather than lazy legislature that can be misused and abused by people in power to make visitors to our country have the worst possible first impression of us and our fair-go attitudes.

Our own Prime Ministers and cabinet have used encrypted messaging which deletes messages etc - honestly you don't think people who intend to do hard aren't just going to use this? This just pushes ordinary citizens to have to resort to these kinds of technologies just to be able to maintain a reasonable expectation of privacy, such as VPNS, dummy phones, apps that delete your data when a certain password is entered etc. This is a massive waste of time and a huge violation of privacy.

Please don't bring this here.

Sincerely,
Samantha McKillop
