

Cambodia-born Community Information Summary

Historical Background

The first recorded Cambodia-born migrants to Australia were a family of nine who arrived in the late 1940s. Following Cambodia's independence from French rule in 1953, Cambodian students began coming to Australia in small numbers. During the 1960s and 1970s, larger groups of students came to Australia under the Colombo Plan, many of whom settled in Australia.

Following the seizure of power in Cambodia by the Communist 'Khmer Rouge' led by Pol Pot in 1975, small numbers of Cambodian asylum-seekers came to Australia. By June 1976, the Cambodia-born population in Australia increased to 500 people. Between April 1975 and June 1986, 12,813 Cambodians came to Australia under the Refugee and Special Humanitarian Program.

In the late 1980s, the numbers of Cambodian arrivals were mainly sponsored relatives of the earlier waves as well as Cambodians who had migrated to New Zealand prior to moving on to Australia.

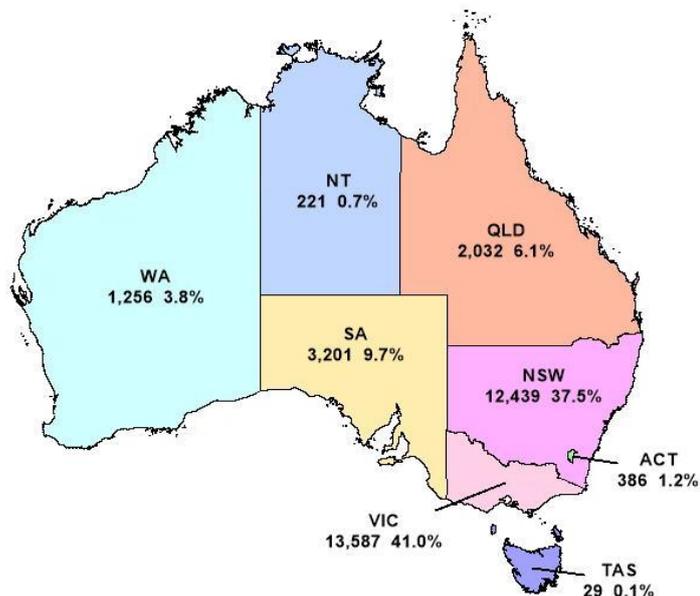

Between 1989 and April 1991, approximately 315 asylum-seekers arrived by boat from Cambodia. The Australian Government subsequently introduced the Special Assistance Category Program to encourage boat arrivals to return to Cambodia and apply for sponsorship to Australia under normal migration procedures. Since the early 1990s most Cambodian-born people arrived in Australia under the Family Migration Stream.
