Australian Immigration Minister and Department

I hope that this email finds you in optimal wellness. I'm writing to propose a significant change to the immigration laws, with a focus on how long-term temporary residents—those who have been in Australia for a long period of time specifically during the COVID pandemic and served the Australia and worked regularly—are treated the same way as those who are Australian citizens as everyone is come from different backgrounds so we can't leave them like that if they are facing Visa medical issues, especially if they have children who have intellectual disabilities. It is advised that the typical visa medical for intellectual disabilities including special education requirements be waived for these families for any visa application. Taking into account that these kids are Australia's future and that they were born here, this change seeks to show empathy while also understanding the particular difficulties these families face. Your careful evaluation of this suggestion would surely help to create a welcoming and encouraging atmosphere for families who have devoted a large portion of their lives to Australia. I appreciate all of your time and thought. We need to show the world that we look after the people who come Australia and has the right skills and we should have separate budget for this and can charge the Levy charge for exceptions if required but we shouldn't throw out of the country for Their children's disability, Please consider the above recommendations for purpose change to the migration policy as the current policy is very old policy and time to improve and consider the long term resident our own by skipping the medical requirements or assessment.

Regards
